Here is another one, this one is incomplete but is all they can get given recruitment difficulties

Hello Adam,

Please find attached two spreadsheets, one for each of the studies run. Thank you for your help, and I hope the data helps as well. Please let me know if you have any questions.

Best,
Cassandra Baldwin

Thank you so much also for being explicit whether or not you would want incomplete datasets. I understand what that could mean regarding actual authorship, but I should have been proactive regarding asking that question--I just did not want any data to be "wasted".

Hi Cassandra

It's mid October so I am just emailing the remaining labs a final reminder to send me the results by end of month. Thanks again for all the hard work! You mentioned that you had less than expected numbers in your previous email, that is fine, incomplete datasets should also be included in the study. We look forward to receiving your datasets by end of month.

Cheers
Adam

Hi Cassandra

Hope you had an enjoyable summer break! Its early September now so I am just emailing the remaining labs for an update on when we should expect to receive the final datasets

Best regards
Adam

Hello Adam,

Thank you for the update and follow-up; that is welcome news. Both studies were in the middle of being coded as of last May, and both had fewer than the requested numbers of participants, even before expected exclusions. At this time, I will continue to try for the requested numbers of participants, but I do get the feeling I will have to withdraw from the project.... I will inform you if I make that decision.

Best,
Cassandra Baldwin

Hi Cassandra

Haven't heard from you with regard to my recent email. Just wanted to let you now that the Editor has agreed to another extension, so as long as you can finish by end of October that should be fine. Can you please give me an update on the progress and expected completion time?

Thanks!
Adam

Good to hear from you Cassandra

Hmm that sounds like it is very close to completion (on average 75% collected). There are other labs in a similar situation and my suggestion is the same - that is, as long as you have given it your best effort and you are close to the target number, I will try to argue for authorship with the Editor. So from now until May, I hope you can still try to continue data collection.

Let me know if you have any questions:)

Cheers
Adam

Hello Adam,

My apologies for the delay. ...I do not think we are. We have collected data from about 70/80 participants for one study and from 50/80 for the other. This year, there is less availability on my part and the part of individuals helping me (it has fluctuated over the past year). If I am not able to collect data from all the participants I need, what would that mean for the existing data? Should I forgo data collection and withdraw from the entire replication effort?

Thank you for any answers.

Hi Cassandra

Just wanted to follow up on the RRR progress - I sent an email requesting an update a month ago and I have not heard back from you. I hope this is because you are on vacation rather than some other obstacle that is precluding your lab's progress. I have spoken to the Editor and she has agreed to extend the deadline so can you please give me an update as to if your lab is on track to completing by May 2024?

Thanks heaps!
Adam

Hi Cassandra

Thanks for the update. Unfortunately you guys are not the only ones in this situation - seems like on campus participation dropped in many places post-covid. I have therefore spoken with the Editor and we have agreed to extend the deadline for a few months. If you could get the data collection and coding completed and sent to us by April 2024, that would be great. The same authorship requirements apply. Thanks!

All the best

Hello Adam,

It is nearing time for the subject pool to close for the year at my university, and I see that I may not end up with the 80 participants per study that is requested for the mega-replication due to lack of sign-ups this semester. Before I think about coding behaviors and responses, I wanted to confirm that 80 participants (after exclusions) was still the requirement needed for authorship. Is this still the case? Thank you for any answers.
