Dear Kai,

I checked it in our paper-pencil documents: The participant with ID did not fully answer the manipulation check.
She reported the correct target word in the blank space, but she did not circle whether it was her task to think vs. not to think at her target word.
That is why we coded it as missing data (i.e., -99).

Best,
Anna

Dear Anna,

I am the analyst in this RRR project.

In your study 1, there is a participant whose MC value (manipulation check) was -99. All other values were 1 or 2. May I clarify what does -99 represent? Does it represent missing data?

Regards,
Kai Qin

Dear Adam,

thanks for the update!
I am currently finishing my PhD, that is while I have not send you an update, yet.

However, we have finished data collection and coding.
I will send you the data this week (just need to copy paste some things, I guesss).

Best,
Anna

Hi everyone

Just to give you an update on where we're currently at with data collection. On the whole it seems that we are largely on track. Aside from the handful of labs that left (mostly early on) the project due to certain difficulties, we have received completed results from 21 labs, and are still waiting for results from 23 labs. Of these 23 labs, the great majority has mentioned recently that they are almost done and should be on track to sending us the completed data by end of this month, and I appreciate you all sticking to the timeframe and the communication and effort thus far.

We are coming to the end of May and it does look like that some of you might not be able to make it on time. However, I would just like to reassure you that the Editor has mentioned that we care about everyone finishing the data collection much more than everyone meeting a certain deadline. We wouldn't want to have people wrapping up data-collection prematurely since that might lead to an underpowered sample. Given the current state therefore, I suspect that we will be able to get one more deadline extension if lack of time is a common issue faced by multiple labs. So can you please give me another update as to when you anticipate being able to send me the completed results?

I look forward to your update, thanks again!
Adam
